

40.02.04 Jurisprudence

The specialty "Jurisprudence" is aimed at training specialists to work in the field of law, focused on solving legal problems of varying complexity, representing interests in court and providing legal advice.

Features of preparation:

The training includes the study of the fundamentals of law, civil, criminal, and administrative legislation, as well as skills in working with documentation and the fundamentals of legal regulation of enterprise activities.

Knowledge and skills of graduates:

Graduates have deep knowledge in the field of law, are able to apply legislation to protect the rights and interests of citizens, and are ready to solve specific legal problems.

Experts will understand the processes of formation and application of legislation, methods of protecting rights in courts, as well as issues of regulating contractual relations and corporate law.

Demand for graduates and career prospects:

The high demand for legal professions is due to the need to protect the rights of citizens and qualified legal support for businesses, which opens up broad career prospects.

College graduates majoring in Jurisprudence will be able to carry out the following types of activities:

1. Law enforcement activities;
2. Law enforcement activities;
3. Ensuring the implementation of citizens' rights in the area of pension provision and social protection;
4. Organizational support for the activities of law enforcement agencies;
5. Organizational and technical support for the operation of courts;
6. Legal support for the activities of organizations and provision of legal assistance to individuals and their associations

Who is this specialty suitable for:

The specialty is suitable for people with an analytical mindset, capable of systemic thinking, who want to protect rights and interests in the legal field, and who strive for justice and order in society.